$314.61 Granular Urea Basket Price: UPDATED - JUNE 6, 2014

Published on: Jun 3, 2014

Ammonia prices at the Gulf for June dropped $40 a ton to around $490, and the trade will wait now for news about offers out of the Black Sea and Middle East, as well as disruptions to supply chains. While terminal costs eased $5 to $10 last week, there was little movement at the retail level, with few dealers putting out new offer sheets. USDA reported the price in Illinois actually firmed to $756, and dealers likely aren't restocking yet. Current prices at the Gulf suggest a cost of around $725 a ton, but fundamentals continue to point towards prices $50 to $100 below that – if the supply chain avoids problems with the flow out of Ukraine and the Caribbean. Weaker U.S. DAP exports could mean more domestic supplies are available.

Urea prices actually took a brief bump higher at the Gulf last week, before losing most of that increase, but the tone of the market appears a little stronger after absorbing news of cheap deals by China when its export taxes ease July 1. Major importer India wants to shift subsidies from urea to phosphates and potash, but local manufacturers may have trouble building nitrogen supplies due to problems obtaining natural gas. Urea typically finds some footing during the summer before easing again ahead of fall demand, and the swaps market is anticipating lower prices into July at the Gulf, which is priced at $295, compared to $323.75 for June. Contracts through September aren't showing much movement yet. Current retail prices are running around $540, and haven't reflected much if any of the break internationally, which amounted to $100 or more a ton. Current fair value based on those lower costs is around $440, with fundamentals pointing to even larger reductions. A few terminals along the river are start to ease, however.

UAN prices were steady this week at the Gulf, with some terminal prices moving higher in areas where wet fields are delaying other nitrogen applications. The cost at the Gulf was still put at $275 for 32%, but swaps for July and August were $52.50 lower than that.

The cost of 28% at the farmgate level is running around $350, which isn't too far from fair value, so costs should work lower into summer.
